

In my opinion, people should trust information on the Internet. I have two reasons to support this based on news and learning. Firstly, Internet news sites are a fantastic source of trustworthy information. The demand for up-to-date news has led to more people submitting videos and photos of events as they happen, such as natural disasters. This information is easy to verify because it comes directly from people experiencing such events, making it easier to trust this information. Secondly, there are many online learning courses on the Internet with content that can be trusted. To ensure their courses are reliable, educational institutions rigorously check the content of their online resources. Moreover, these courses are widely recognized, adding to their authenticity. In conclusion, due to the increasing amount of news generated directly from the source and the high quality of learning resources online, we should trust information on the Internet.